

EdShed - Easter Break

Over the holidays, I will continue to set weekly spelling and timestables assignments for you on SpellingShed and MathsShed. Like last week, your access to other spelling lists (apart from your Danger Words) and maths games will be limited until you have completed the required number of games (usually this will be 10).

This week, I have been keeping an eye on your SpellingShed scores and I have to say that I have been extremely impressed by the amazing job you have been doing so far: as a class, we are currently 3rd in both leagues! A particularly huge well done to Connie and Callum who have each gained over 10 million points on SpellingShed.

However our Top Speller and Mathstronaut this week is Amelia, with a whopping 12.5 million points on SpellingShed and 5.5 million points on MathsShed! Honey-pot rewards are on their way to all 3 of you!

Will anybody be able to beat them over the next few weeks?!?

Difficulty level and speed

You always have the choice of which difficulty you use to complete the activities. However, in order to show that you really know your timestables, you need to be able to complete your assigned activity on Hard mode and in under 6 seconds.

For spelling, you need to complete your assigned activities on Hard/Extreme mode. If you do not do this then that activity may be reset for you the following week. This will be a challenge but now is the time to practise!

On a similar note, some of you have been doing an awesome job and have been really trying to rack up the points, but...

Did you know that the more difficult the level, the more points you could get?!

For some of you, you should really be thinking of challenging yourself by stepping out of your comfort zone and upping the difficulty a little.

There are still a handful of you that have not completed any activities on the EdShed platform yet. At some point over this week, please could you log-in and try an activity on both the MathsShed and SpellingShed so we can check everything is working properly. Some of you have already spoken to me, but if there are any reasons why you can't access these then please let me know so we can sort something out!
